

1. Christians believe that the Bible is the word of God.

This is a universal (empirical) statement as it is about every single Christian.

2. The human race was not created by God, but evolved from lower forms of life.

This is a universal (empirical) truth claim. Because we can get past facts or evidences to prove or disprove this truth-claim

3. I absolutely adore Robertson Davies' novels.

This is a non-empirical truth claim. It is evaluative as it makes personal judgments about Robertson Davies' novels. Which to prove will require deductions from self-evident premises and justifying reasons.

4. Everyone has a conscience, even those who deny it.

This is a non-empirical truth claim. It is a truth claim that can not be proven as true or false by regarding past, present, or future facts. Also, the definition of conscience is vague because we have no set metrics that can say whether someone has a conscience.

5. The game would have ended in a 0-0 draw, if Sidney Crosby had not scored an instant before the final buzzer sounded.

This is a particular (empirical) truth claim. It's about the particular fact of how the game would have ended if Sidney didn't score or if the buzzer sounded earlier.
